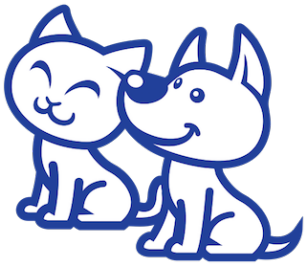
Pet Weight Tracking Chart



My Pet's Name: _____

Tracking your pet's weight over time is a very important tool in managing their health and ensuring that what you're feeding them is helping them maintain an appropriate weight.

Using this handy tracker, simply weight your pet on a regular basis (at least once per month), and record the date and weight below. It also helps to have a "target weight" you're working to maintain, which your veterinarian can help you determine.

You should show this chart to your vet during check ups or any visits you have, as it provides important information that they can incorporate into their recommendations and advice.

Today's Date	Today's Weight	Target Weight	Pounds To Go	Comments/Notes (details on food being fed, snacks, changes noticed, etc.)

Can't get your pet to stand on the scale?

If your pet won't stand still on the scale, here's a trick to get their weight. First, step on the scale yourself and record your weight. Then, pick your pet up and stand on the scale with them and record the combined weight. Then, deduct the combined weight from yours, and that will leave your pet's weight.
